Brattleboro Historical

Brattleboro is situated in the southeast corner of the Green Mountain State on the beautiful Connecticut River where magnificent drives and scenery unexcelled in America abound. Wantastiquet Lake affords excellent fishing and boating and the forests of the surrounding towns abound in game.

The town derives its name from William Brattle, one of the grantees of the town, and his name is the first one on the list. As he was loyal to King George, he fled to Nova Scotia at the commencement of the Revolutionary War. It is supposed that he died there before the close of the war.

In 1742, or nearly 200 years ago, the first settlement was made in this section of New England and Fort Dummer was built on the banks of the Connecticut River about one mile south of the present heart of Brattleboro.

A charter of Brattleboro was granted by King George II in 1753.

The beginning of the village proper was nearly 40 years after the first settlement and probably owes its early existence to Whetstone brook, which furnished power for industries, and the presence of lead and gold in this vicinity.

In 1772 the first dwelling house was built by Samuel Knight, lawyer. For a time development was more rapid and many small dwellings were erected near the mills. In 1777 another grist mill was built, and a general repair shop was added in 1784. The first store was opened about 1789 and was located near where the American block now stands. James and Edwin Houghton were the proprietors.

Brattleboro is situated in the heart of New England and all it needed to enhance its importance was rapid communication with the outside world which came in 1849. The building of the Vermont and Massachusetts railroad to Brattleboro was the cause of great rejoicing in the staid old town.

For many years it was the dream of progressive Brattleboro men to harness the Connecticut River that flows swiftly past the town and furnish power for manufacturing. Considerable money was subscribed and soundings made but still the water flowed past unused until 1908 when public spirited men subscribed sufficient capital to make thorough sounding to locate proper foundation for a dam. Such a foundation could not be found nearer than four miles south of Brattleboro and nearly opposite the village of Hinsdale, N. H. Outside capital was interested and the river was harnessed at a cost of nearly $2,000,000. Brattleboro now has very cheap electric power to offer manufacturers and within a radius of 50 miles is the greatest hydro-electrical power development on the Atlantic seaboard.

The manufacture of organs is still the leading industry. Manufactories of furniture, cotton goods and machinery are recent additions and the future of Brattleboro as a great manufacturing center is assured.

Brattleboro dominates the retail and wholesale trade within a radius of many miles. Real railroad competition is enjoyed. Passenger service and freight rates to and from New York, Boston, Chicago, Montreal and other far and near points compare favorably with almost any other New England town. A new railroad to the west over the Green Mountain range is projected.
